Party Action Forseen By Temperance Forces

Would Have Dry Program
Rooted In Every Municipality

ASK AID OF CHURCHES

Forseeing need for prompt action in event of political party activity in the near future, the North York Temperance Federation is preparing its organization to face a crisis. The Era learned in an interview with Rev. Byron Snell, of Aurora, assistant president, recently.

An effort is being made to get the program of the federation rooted in every municipality. Material is on hand to assist in oration contests, readings, public meetings, and other types of temperance programs.

Townships are to be organized by having a mass meeting from say, two representatives of each congregation, Sunday-school, Y. P. S. W. M. S., Ladies' Aids, Women's Institutes, Farmers' Clubs, or other organizations in sympathy with the work. Each church is asked to have a temperance committee to look after

RECEIVE NEW MEMBERS

There will be a special service on Sunday at Trinity United church for communion and the reception of new members.

temperance work in the congregation. Every minister in the area who is in sympathy with the work is a member of the executive.

The county executive is: honorary presidents, J. M. Walton, Aurora, and Dr. S. J. Boyd, Newmarket; president, Dr. J. P. Wilson, Richmond Hill; assistant president, Rev. B. Snell, Aurora; vice-president, I. N. Morton, Newmarket; secretary-treasurer,

Changed Society By Home Contacts Seen By Speaker

Tattling Spreads To Community From Home
Group Told

"Few of us have the power to sway crowds of Canadian voters as has Agnes McPhail, or Nellie McClung with her rare gift as an author, or as Claire Wallace with her fluency as a radio commentator," Mrs. Ross Armitage told the Willing Workers of Pine Orchard church at the home of Mrs. James Hope on Wednesday of last week. "Yet all of us," she continued, "in our own homes are the centres of little worlds, whose spirit and problems are a miniature of the world without."

"Our influence affects brothers, sisters, parents, children, relatives, friends, hired help and tradespeople, for good or evil. If the spirit of each home were Christian—the influence radiating from it would be a tremendous power for good in the world. Christian contacts in home life could revolutionize society to such an extent that men would hate war and the material gain derived from it," Mrs. Armitage stated.

"We teach our children that the marriage vows are sacred and not to be taken lightly," she asked. "Do we impress on them

SCARECROW CREEPS ABOUT

The Young People of Trinity United church put on their play, "The Scarecrow Creeps," at St. Paul's United church, Brampton, last Thursday evening, under the sponsorship of the Women's Auxiliary of that church. Rev. T. W. F. G. Andrews, formerly of Trinity church here, is the minister of the Brampton church. Following the play a light lunch was served.

Last Wednesday they had the play at Sharon and a week previously the Belhaven congregation had an opportunity to see this excellent play. On Friday the group go to Zephyr.

Won't Sell Other Parts Of Right Of Way, Get $1,000

Mile Of Right-of-Way To Be Sold For Riding Field

Sale of part of the former T. C. right-of-way in the neighborhood of Roche's Point, as proposed, does not mean that other portions will be sold by North Gwillimbury township council, The Era was told this week.

The question comes before the township council on June 7 and the council will pass a by-law authorizing the sale unless some ratepayer can convince the council that the sale should not be made.

The land in question runs parallel to the highway, between the base line and Varney Rd., and has no possibilities at all as a second highway, in the opinion of members of the township council. The land to be sold is a strip about a mile in length and is wanted by nearby residents as a community riding-ground. The price offered is $1,000.

The land could not be sold without the consent of the property-owners on whose holdings it abuts, and these are the residents who wish to purchase it.

HIP Committee Share Building Picture Meeting Friday Night

A Home Improvement Plan representative will speak at the talkie show, sponsored by W. H. Eves, in co-operation with John-Manville, to be given in the R. S. A. Bugle band hall on Friday evening at 8 o'clock. The meeting will be jointly sponsored by the local Home Improvement Plan committee.

If you are thinking about re-modelling your house, don't fail to see "The House That Ann Built," a romantic drama of home building.

This unusual talking picture is said to be the first to combine the glamor of the cinema with the romance of home building and to use the silver screen as a means of showing the public

USE PREPARATORY SERVICE AT ST. PAUL'S

The official special coronation preparatory service was used in its entirety with the special hymns at St. Paul's Anglican church on Sunday. The hymn, "The King, O God, his heart to thee upraiseth," was sung as an anthem.

The church was decorated with flags and the short sermon stressed the hallowing of the king for his office and the responsibility of the citizens who, through their representatives in the abbey, also make vows.

practical ways of building and modernizing houses.

It shows how one family solved the troublesome problem of whether to remodel or build. As the interesting plot unfolds, it shows the amazement of the little group at the wonders performed by the handsome architect in converting a regular "chicken coop" shanty into a handsome dwelling.

The romantic theme of the film is played against a background of strikingly handsome rooms, designed by an expert in the field, and if you can keep your eyes off the pretty young heroine, dozens of ideas for modernizing your kitchen, bathroom, or basement will present themselves.

THEIR MAJESTIES KING GEORGE VI AND QUEEN ELIZABETH

KING ANOINTED TO SERVE GOD PASTOR TELLS

Crown Jewels' Significance Explained By Rev. J. H. Wells

MUSIC BY JUNIOR CHOIR

Addressed particularly to the boys and girls, Rev. J. H. Wells' Sunday morning sermon at Trinity United church was on the crown jewels.

"To some of you boys and girls coronation is just another holiday from school," Mr. Wells said. "The coronation is really a very wonderful event."

"The crown jewels consist of 26 different articles. All of them are very, very beautiful, and very valuable. They are called the regalia. There are crowns, sceptres, orb, and so on."

"We all know that it is the Archbishop of Canterbury of the Anglican church, head of the established church in the old land, who has the great part in the ceremony. Some of the crown jewels are in the ampulla, which is in the form of an eagle. The holy oil is poured into a spoon. The archbishop will dip his fingers into the oil and anoint the king. This part of the ceremony is intended to be specially holy. Only him who is anointed by Jehovah or Jehovah's servant is fit to be king. The holy oil signifies the holy spirit."

"The sceptre signifies the holy sceptre. The king has a sceptre. The queen has one. At the top is a cross. The cross, as all boys and girls know, is a very beautiful symbol. Christ died on the cross. He ruled with a cross. There is a dove on the king's sceptre. That indicates that he can't rule without the spirit of God."

TELLS MEANING OF CORONATION

"The coronation ceremony is no Hollywood show," Dr. D. McIntyre told his congregation at the Presbyterian church, Newmarket, on Sunday morning. "It is a living ceremony where one man and one woman take upon them the dedication to the service of the empire."

Speaking of the choice of kings, Dr. McIntyre took his text from the 15th verse of the 17th chapter of Deuteronomy, "thou shalt surely set him king over thee, whom Jehovah thy God shall choose."

The king was elected by God, the minister stated, and men simply carried out the ceremony. The king was chosen by God because of his mental and intellectual strength and not for physical prowess, he said.

The minister pointed out that while some in the past had objected to so much ceremony, it was necessary to impress the recipient of the crown with the conditions of his position and purpose. It was the duty of the king to see that the laws of God were carried out throughout his kingdom. The king will swear to protect the Protestant religion, he said.

The evening service took the form of a Mothers' Day service and was followed by a fellowship meeting in the Sunday-school room. Mrs. Leonard Little and Mrs. McDowell sang a duet in the evening service.

Church To Be Restored At Landing, 95 Years Service

Money Still Needed To Carry Through Rebuilding Plans

Ninety-five years in the service of God, weather-beaten and battered, the Holland Landing United church is to be restored. A committee has already raised promises of $1,100 of the $2,000 needed to carry out the work of renovation this summer.

The church was formerly Methodist. Services have been held there uninterruptedly for 95 years. Rev. Harold Vaughan of Bradford is the minister.

Renovation will include a new basement, a new furnace, new entrance, re-decoration, stuccoing, almost rebuilding. The work will take from two to three months.

H. Babb Voices Criticism Of Sale Of Right Of Way

Suggests Route Be Used To Relieve Lake Shore Road

When the North Gwillimbury council meets on June 7 to consider the sale of part of the former Transportation Commission right of way, there is one man at least who will have something to say about it, The Era learned on Friday.

"I believe the sale of this part of the right of way would be a most foolhardy and unbusinesslike piece of business," Harry Babb, keenly interested in developments along the lake shore, told The Era.

"Abdication, 1937 Coronation Will Interest Future More Than 1066"

Town Gaily Decorated For Coronation Parade and Service

AUBREY DAVIS SPEAKS

An impressive parade and a beautiful service at Memorial Park marked observation here yesterday of the coronation of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth. Following the service here in the morning, many citizens, the R. S. A. Bugle band, local floats, and town officials took part in a county celebration at Aurora.

Delivering the principal address at the Newmarket service at the memorial, Aubrey Davis, president of the Davis Leather Co., told the coronation story from the days of the Druids. One of the interesting incidents related by Mr. Davis concerned the coronation of William the Conqueror.

"The coronation took place almost immediately after the Normans had overthrown the Saxons," Mr. Davis said. "Great misgivings existed among the military advisers of William. They were afraid of trouble. The Archbishop of Canterbury had refused to participate. He said he would not help to crown an invader whose hands were stained with Saxon blood. So the abbey was filled with picked Norman troops. The Saxons were outside."

"The Saxon ceremony was followed. The custom was that the Saxons acclaimed the king at a certain point in the ceremony. But they were outside and could not see what was going on, and took their cue too early. The Normans thought their cheers were shouts of defiance and rushed out, swords drawn. It was quite natural that fighting should follow."

"Soon only the Archbishop of York, who was performing the ceremony, and William were left in the abbey. William wanted the ceremony speeded up, but the archbishop insisted that the full Saxon ceremony had to be followed if William wouldn't be properly king. When William got through, the streets were

REDS PRACTISE BALL TONIGHT

"I want all interested in softball, at the Stuart Scott school grounds on Thursday night at 7 o'clock!" Yes, it was Joe Spillie speaking, and the words officially open the softball season, so far as Newmarket is concerned. It's the Redmen's first official workout.

A good number of the old guard of last year's team are on hand, but as usual, the Redmen hope to bring in a number of promising players to bolster the team's fighting strength.

Anyone and everyone with an idea of what a baseball bat can be used for, is asked to be at the ball grounds at 7 o'clock tonight. The Redmen are going places again this year, and aspiring players are urgently invited to hop on the wagon along with them.

PLAY AGAIN IN YORK - SIMCOE

Decision to enter again the York-Simcoe tennis league was reached at a meeting of the Newmarket Tennis club on Monday evening. Miss Alberta Simpson and J. S. Choppin were elected delegates to represent the club at the annual meeting of the league at Allandale next Monday night.

Officers were elected as follows: honorary president, P. W. Pearson; hon. vice-pres., Mrs. W. E. Lyons, Andrew J. Davis; president, N. L. Mathews; vice-pres., Thomas E. Scott; secretary, Miss Phyllis Peppiatt; convener of grounds committee, Arnold Molyneux; convener of tournament committee, Miss B. E. Lyons; convener of refreshment committee, Mrs. C. H. Thompson.

The personnel of the various committees will be selected by a striking committee composed of the executive.

The membership committee is composed of J. S. Choppin, Stuart Parks, Lawrence Wright, Miss Alberta Simpson and Mrs. C. H. Thompson.

The lighting of the third court was discussed. If the membership this year is sufficient to warrant the expense of doing so, it will be lighted this year.

LEADS SERVICE

Mrs. D. McIntyre addressed a Mothers' Day service held in the Danforth Presbyterian church, Toronto, on Sunday evening.

Belugin's Park Ave. home was second, and the home of Edward Mitchell, Andrew St., came third. The homes of W. H. S. Cane, William Wright, W. W. Osborne, Mrs. Edward Peat and Arthur Peppiatt were given honorable mention.

W. J. Hopkinson, Ross Hugo and Rudy Renzius were the judges.

Gilroy, enterprising men's clothing merchant, announced this week that he has leased the former premises of the Bank of Toronto, which will be remodelled into an up-to-date retail store with attractive display windows. Mr. Gilroy will occupy the former Province of Ontario savings office during July, August and September while the alterations are being made.

Reds Would Destroy Nation Mayor Boyd Tells Schools

Pupils Given Medallions At Impressive Ceremonies On Tuesday

Hundreds of happy public, separate and high school children received coronation medals from the hands of the mayor and members of the school boards at school services on Tuesday afternoon.

Dr. S. J. Boyd, the mayor, visited the separate school in company with Rev. W. D. Muckle and Bernard McNeil, chairman of the separate school board. W. H. Flag-Waving Covers Many Sins, Declares Headmaster

Jos. McCulley Stresses Real Significance Of Coronation

"The word 'imperialism,' in the sense that it indicates dominance or extension of power by force of arms or perhaps even by stealth, has fallen into bad repute these days," Headmaster Joseph McCulley stated in his address on "Kingship" given to the students of Pickering College at the close of their coronation service on Tuesday afternoon.

"There are those whose patriotism consists of flag-waving, the chief intention of which is to cover much iniquity," Mr. McCulley said. He recalled the American newspaper which for many years carried on its masthead the quotation, "my country may she always be in the right, but my country, right or wrong."

Double Wedding Held At Free Methodist Kirk, Bibles Given

When the Free Methodist church was built here in 1913, a promise was made by the society that the first couple to be married in the church would be presented with a Bible. The presentation took place last Thursday, but two Bibles were presented as the first wedding in the church was a double one.

The church was beautifully decorated with flowers when Violet Perry, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. N. Perry, became the bride of Earl Bull of Jefferson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Bull of Jefferson; and Lorraine Westgarth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horatio Westgarth, of Udonia, was married to Arthur Perry, son of Rev. and Mrs. N. Perry.

Rev. N. Perry, father of one of the brides and one of the grooms, performed the ceremony, assisted by Rev. E. J. Lee.

Both brides were dressed in blue. Miss Perry chose navy with matching accessories, and Miss Westgarth chose light blue with navy accessories. Both carried bouquets of roses.

Miss Bertha Perry attended her sister, Miss Dorothy Westgarth, was her sister's bridesmaid. Both girls were dressed in printed sheer with matching accessories and carried bouquets of sweet peas.

Archie Bull of Jefferson and Austin Baxter of Uxbridge were groomsmen.

Following the church service a reception was held at the Perry home. The many guests included relatives and friends from Udonia, Sunderland, and Jefferson.

Mr. and Mrs. Bull left for a trip to Westport and will make their home in Jefferson. Mr. and Mrs. Perry will make their home on Timothy St. on their return.

A KING IS CROWNED

King George VI was crowned yesterday king of ever so many nations, more nations than any man was ever crowned king of before, and possibly of more people than any man was ever king of before. It is one of the strangest phenomena of this modern world, the most ancient of political institutions, a kingship, in the most modern of political institutions, a commonwealth of nations (even more modern than a world league of nations). In the weeks and months that preceded the coronation we heard and thought more of the political significance of the coronation, but yesterday we were impressed more with the religious side of the coronation.

Divine Right, Divine Blessing

Just as new interpretations have been placed on the political side of the coronation, so new interpretations have been placed on the religious side of the ceremony. At one time the king reigned and ruled, but his prestige and popularity today are the greater because he merely reigns while others rule—accepting responsibility for unpopular or popular acts of government. That is a political change. There is a corresponding change in the religious side of the coronation. The church plays a great part in the coronation. The coronation is a religious ceremony. The Archbishop of Canterbury, not the prime ministers, anoints the king. That custom grew up at a time, we suppose, when the king was in a position to arrange coronation details and was no doubt based on the king's preference that he should receive his authority from God rather than from his people. The Stuarts' belief in the "divine right of kings" still crowns the king, but we see in this ceremonial not the divine right of kings but the divine blessing. Thus our conservatism retains old customs and our liberalism puts new interpretations upon them.

A TIDIER, HEALTHIER TOWN

There has been general commendation of the reeve's proposal that the town should either take over the collection of garbage or assume some control of collection. Town collection of garbage would be a step forward. A clean town, which includes clean backyards, is a matter of public health and a matter of public concern. Dr. J. H. Wesley, on whose recommendation as M. O. H. the matter will probably be decided, has declared that the present methods of garbage collection are unsatisfactory and has expressed himself as in favor of a change. More than that, it is suggested that the town may be able to do the work more cheaply than it has been done in the past. That would be popular, if it proved true. In any event, it is to be hoped that the change does not work hardship to those now engaged in the collection of garbage.

STOP THIEF! STOP THIEF!

A couple of men walk into a bank and steal a large sum of money. The police become very anxious to know who committed this robbery. Somehow we feel much more concerned about why they committed it. If society just knew that, there would be no need to worry about their identity. The principal reason for punishing criminals, we are told, is to deter others from crime. If we just knew why those two men robbed that bank we could forget about punishing them and busy ourselves about changing the conditions which produced that crime and which, if unremedied, will produce similar crimes.

A Yottland Scare Inspector

Thinking along these lines we decided to consult a friend of ours at Yottland Scare. He would talk about who the criminals likely were, but we insisted that this was the less important side of the case and finally got him talking about why the crime was committed. We of course agreed that the kind of people who committed the robbery, if he could throw any light on that subject, was of importance to our inquiry. The inspector proceeded to suggest a number of theories, which we set out here.

He Does Some Railing Out

"First," said the inspector, warming to his subject, "I would point out that it was in all probability entirely an economic matter. It is possible that these men were well-to-do, without any need for money, and that they were just seeking a thrill. I say that is possible, but not probable. Further than that, I would say that the robbing of a bank cannot be put down, in probability, to a so-called 'criminal nature'; we might say that of an habitual killer or a reckless 'fire-bug,' although we have to be very careful in these days of psychologists and criminologists in suggesting that some people are born criminals. I would point out too that the robbers probably meant harm to no human being. They regard a bank as an impersonal institution which can very well afford to be robbed occasionally, and they were kindly about not shutting the door of the vault against the staff. Of course, that may have been just caution lest they should not become involved in a more serious crime.

The Inspector's Theory

"Probably those men wanted money and wanted it badly," continued the inspector. "If you or I want money badly enough, we go to a friend or a bank and borrow it. Of course, we have to give some security. Our robber friends probably had no security to offer a bank and they had no friends who could or who would lend them money.

An Extravagant Suggestion

"Superficially, one might say that our social system therefore fell down in not providing these gentlemen with an adequate income, but that would indeed be superficial, for there is still the possibility that they had a reasonable income but lived beyond it, or that they had the opportunity to work but preferred to steal, or that they had at an earlier point in their careers an opportunity to fit themselves for jobs or positions now open to them if only they had qualified themselves at the right time. You see how intricate the subject is, and without casting any reflection on the law, I would point out that this intricacy is the reason that we of the law have avoided as far as possible this subject of motives and justification, preferring to stick to objective and factual tests in the determination of guilt. If a man goes into a bank and takes money, he is a robber, even though he has no other way of obtaining money and he uses the money to pay for an operation which will save his wife's life. You will see that it would be utterly impossible, without tremendously increasing the cost of law enforcement, for the law to take such facts into consideration. We would have to employ a staff of economists, psychologists, alienists and criminologists in our criminal investigation department. Our judges would have to be specially trained in psychology as well as in law. Our lawyers would have to be similarly equipped. More than that, we would seem, in many instances, to be too lenient, and would perhaps encourage other crimes. I admit, however, that if it were possible for us to proceed along those lines, conducting our inquiry into crimes in a closed court, as juvenile court judges do, or as a physician deals with a sick man, we would learn a great deal about human nature and this strange thing called crime.

What Cause Crime

"Now I would suggest several sets of circumstances, although you might add many more, which could lead to a bank robbery. The two men may have been unemployed for several years and finally became 'fed up.' They may have been respectable business men who got involved in financial difficulties and saw a desperate way out. One only may have needed money and the other may have been a young man who was recruited for the adventure. Or these men may have been married to women who lived beyond their circumstances, women who wanted splendid new automobiles which their husbands couldn't afford. Perhaps there was illness in one of these homes; there may have been a crippled son for whom an expensive operation would mean a chance in life. Or suppose that these were two young men wanting to marry girls with whom they were in love but were held back year after year by poor wages. Perhaps the girls were not patient enough and taunted them for their poor earning power. Perhaps the girls even suggested the bank robbery to them. Conceivably, the robbers were men who thought it would be more degrading to accept public assistance than to help themselves at the expense of a bank.

Robbers Classified

"I think we may safely say that bank robbers can be divided into three classes; men of good reputation who commit robbery for the sake of others near and dear to them; men of previous good character who are tempted to commit robbery for their own personal and selfish advantage; and men who are not impressed with our social code of the sanctity of property, men who think that 'all's fair in love or war' and that 'takings are keepings.' You may call them criminals if you will.

Lecture Ended

"When society can afford to go to that expense I think that we should analyze the motives behind all crimes. We would find that a certain percentage were committed because the principals lacked an opportunity to earn an income; a certain percentage because the principals lacked the training to enable them to earn a living; a certain percentage because the principals lacked good friends or recreational activities; a certain percentage because the principals had unorthodox ideas of right and wrong, in other words, because their school and home education had been a failure; a certain percentage because the principals were seeking a thrill, although that is possibly the same as lacking recreational opportunities; a certain percentage because they were just selfish and greedy, although that again is lack of proper education; a certain percentage of crimes because of jealousy and lack of self-control. These reasons dovetail with each other, but I feel that if we had some statistics of this sort we would know how to change our home training, our schools, our social system so that we could eventually eliminate this phenomenon known as crime. There now," said the inspector, "I didn't intend to give you a lecture like this."

CORONATION DECORATIONS

The decorations yesterday were a credit to the town. Newmarket is one of the up-and-comingest communities in the province. When there is something to celebrate, Newmarket knows how to do it. The sister town of Aurora didn't do badly either.

WORK NEEDED

Some of the streets in the north-west end of the town, streets that need not be named, are in terrific condition. It is to be hoped that the public works committee have been allowed enough money to put these streets in reasonable shape.

PAGEANTRY OF SUMMER

Now that the coronation is over, it is not too soon to look forward to the York history pageant being planned by Dr. C. E. VanderVoort and the Lions club. It is a summer of pageantry.

YOUR OWN CHILDREN MORE BEAUTIFUL

Now's the time to buy a hoe and a rake and get out into the garden. The flowers you grow yourself are more beautiful than any hot-house products.

STRAIT AND NARROW

The coronation parade yesterday again revealed the narrowness of Main St. Motorists were requested to keep their cars off Main St. while the parade passed. This was sensible, but how nice it would have been if there had been room for the cars to park along the Main St.

ARMAMENTS

The coronation has undoubtedly proved a godsend to those who, in Britain, have been charged with the responsibilities of government and the enlisting of public support for the burdensome rearmament budget. This problem of peace and war will have to be solved before the problem of prosperity can be solved. Preparation for war seems to bring prosperity but everybody realizes that lasting prosperity cannot be built upon the non-productive, and possibly destructive, manufacture of war materials.

PLAYGROUND SUGGESTIONS

Dr. W. D. Muckle took a good suggestion to the town council last week. It was to put a north end field in shape as a playing ground. A community can save itself a lot of trouble and parents a lot of grief by providing recreational opportunities. Councillor Arthur Evans added another good suggestion that the town pay the school caretakers a small amount for supervising play on the various school grounds during the holiday months.

CORONATION UNITY

One of the incidental values about a great event such as the coronation of the king and queen is the way it brings us all together and makes us realize how unimportant, after all, are our differences, social, economic, political. This is even more evident in the old country where common loyalty to the throne breaks down on such occasions the most marked class differences. Imagine, too, having a political meeting on coronation day. What difficulty there would be in making the audience feel that it was more important to be a Conservative than a Liberal, or better to be a Liberal than a Conservative. On such occasions as a coronation we all come together as citizens, each putting our own interpretations on the coronation, but without a difference as citizens and neighbors.

The Common Round

By Isabel Inglis Colville

"I'm Going To The Coronation"

Yes, by the time this goes to print, I shall have reached London Town by way of H. M. S. "Bookland."

I've secured a stateroom which I hope I will not encourage mal-de-mer—sea sickness to you—as our fellow columnist might say, for alas and also alack, I am a poor sailor!

For weeks I've thought coronation, read coronation, dreamed coronation, but always one stern fact planted itself in the foreground—where was the money to come from—and always my own common sense echoed, "where?" But will-power, plus various aids and multiplied by imagination, came to my rescue, and the impossible became possible.

From the many lovely fashions displayed in every magazine for this never-to-be-forgotten spring, I have chosen a wardrobe, which I hope will be suitable for every occasion.

Perhaps you will wonder, how, so suddenly, I managed to finance my trip—perhaps you'd even like to join me. Well, come along—I'm going in a scrap-book!

Starting with the ship on which I would like to have sailed, I intend, by means of pictures and articles, to piece together, for my future delectation, a record of all that I would have striven to see, could I have gone in reality, and also many things I could never have hoped to see.

From the wealth of material, written and pictured, I shall choose only what especially appeals to me—the little intimate, personal write-ups, which make our Royal family live for us, with the best pictures of them.

Also pictures of the preparations being made in London—the decorating and rehearsing, and, too, articles on the quaint and picturesque customs, which come to light only when a sovereign is crowned.

Then I want pictures of the procession; of the famous personages who will gather in London at that time; of the Abbey, and the ancient and symbolical rite of crowning—well, I intend as nearly as possible to have an account—an illustrated one—as minute and detailed, as if I had been an eyewitness and kept a diary.

Such a souvenir will be something to keep forever, and I shall certainly feel, by the time my book tour is ended, that I am richer mentally, and that as far as possible, short of actually seeing and hearing, that I have participated in the coronation.

Flags Flutter and Chickadees Flare Up

BY RUTH DINGMAN HEBB

"I have been listening to Bob Bobolink, as I sit on our eggs," Cora Chickadee told Chips, her husband, one fine May morning. "He's singing 'I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles,' I think."

"Well, he certainly does bubble all right," laughed Chips. "There's no one I'd rather listen to than Bob. Everyone's music sounds nice at this time of year."

"You must have been listening to a lot of music since you flew off a while ago," said Cora. "You said you were just going over to say 'good-morning' to Chubby and would only be gone a minute. Where in the heavens were you, may I ask?"

"Now, don't nag, my love," grinned Chips. "I have never been a chickadee-pecked husband, and I'm not going to be this year."

"I'm not nagging," insisted Cora, "but I have been alone a lot lately. Don't forget that I let you go away over to the centre of town yesterday and watch the coronation parade."

"Yes, but I told you all about it, my dear little Cora," expostulated her husband. "Besides, Pecker and Mrs. Pecker, and Handsome and the Blue Jay, and Kitty Catbird and her husband fairly begged me to go with them to Aurora to see the afternoon parade there, and I didn't go."

Cora's face turned pink with vexation. "Well, my black cap!" she stuttered. "You know perfectly well that Pecker and Mrs. Pecker haven't laid their eggs yet and the others haven't even got their nests built. Mrs. Pecker was all finished after a lot of hard work. They made a brand new hole in a tree and it was quite a job. That trip was to celebrate having it all done, and now they are going to settle right down. It's all very well for you to go gadding about and leave me here to look after the eggs. But I get tired of being alone."

"Why, my love, you amaze me," chirped Chips. "I had no idea you felt this way. You always say that you like to do most of the work yourself. And I always tell you the news when I get home from anywhere."

"Quite true, but that doesn't mean I want you flying all over town having a good time," said Cora firmly. "I think you should stay right near by and talk to me."

"You must be quite worn out," said her mate. "I don't know when I've seen you flare up like this. I tell you what. You just preen your feathers and go for a little jaunt yourself and I'll look after the eggs until you get back."

"You just run over to the woods and look at Mrs. Pecker's new home," he suggested. "She'll be proud to show it to you. Then you drop over to see Hattie Nuthatch and have a good gossip with her. You certainly must get out occasionally after this. Now go on. Get ready."

"You're really very sweet," chirped Cora humbly. "I would like to see the girls. And, of course, I didn't really mean the nasty things I said. But, do you think you can take care of the eggs all right?"

"Of course, silly," replied Chips. "I guess I've looked after eggs before. After all this is the third year we've brought up a family. Good-bye. Have a good time. Dear knows when you'll get a chance like this again," he added, with a grin.

THE THREE-HORSE EVENING

Hauling big stones on loose earth is hard on horses. If you have a very heavy stone-boat it is doubly hard on horses. And if the horses have been taking a holiday for five months it is even harder. And the mares in foal should not draw too hard.

Other horses stood idle in the stable waiting until land and drivers would be ready for them. Why not hitch Gyp beside Poll and Bess to share their load? There was the cultivator with full equipment for three horses. Simply transfer the eveners to the stone-boat and bring along the other horse. She would need to be harnessed for the afternoon anyway.

But would the eveners stand it? We feared not. Designed for the steady drag of the cultivator or harrows it might snap under the strain of a real load. And then there would be another repair problem. So Poll and Bess tugged at the stone-boat and Gyp stamped her eagerness in the stall.

Yesterday two men worked for 12 long hours preparing soil and doing chores. They worked for 12 hours the day before yesterday and they will work for 12 hours tomorrow. Last night one of them went to the board meeting of his local co-operative. He yawned, and so did the other directors, each one coming from a day of hard work. He came home and went to bed more tired than one should be. Yesterday, as the two men worked in a field beside the road, there came one who was unemployed. He would be willing to work for a small sum. But the sum was too great for the income of the farm on which the two were overworked. So the two hurried on with their overwork, and the one wandered off with his unemployment.

The idle one was scarcely out of sight when the sun struck upon polished metal coming over the hill. An automobile worth more than those of a dozen tillers of the fertile soil sped by. At the wheel was a young man who in all his life has done nothing to justify his livelihood.

Overworked of the form and qualities of body and brain, his chief problem has been to find amusement which might relieve the boredom of a purposeless existence. He has toiled not, neither has he spun, yet the economic system has overfed him.

Apparently there is lacking some sort of eveners in the world of men as well as in the world of horses. The doubletree which chains two men to a 12-hour day while two more are idle is no longer adequate.

I do not say that all four men should pull exactly alike at the traces. But I do say that it would be better to have four men each working a six-hour day than to have the present maldistribution of labor.

THE REEVE SPEAKS
(By Pedagogue)

It was a bright idea for a local women's association to have the reeve of the township address their meeting the other afternoon. Since women are granted the franchise it is a wise thing for them to be intelligently instructed in county and township government.

Let them go a step further and have the provincial M.L.A. tell them about Ontario government affairs, and the local M.P. discuss the matters over which the federal government has jurisdiction.

Even our teachers would be helped in their teaching of civics to have these officials give a special lesson on "How We Are Governed." The pupils would be more impressed than by the same lessons being taught by their teachers.

Way; pianist, Mrs. R. Handcock; press secretary, Mrs. R. Handcock; auditors, Mrs. J. S. Moore and Miss Mary Johnston.

Notes . . . To You

A Note Of Weariness

I am tired of sitting solemn in this office writing columns and I'm fed-up with the constant need for type. Why can't our muscles harden as we struggle in the garden, or else sit down and watch the squashes ripen? But while we're digging proudly, the boss is screaming loudly that it's time to put The Era on the press. And when the boss is shouting of what we're forget-abouts, there's nothing left to do but answer yes. Yes! YES!

So we leave the shovel as a token of such harsh words that were spoken at a turn to write of marriage or a birth. For unless the boss is scheming how to pay us for just dreaming, we have to work like heck to show our worth. Though the cauliflowerers are calling we will have to stop our stalling and see if we can earn our share of dough. Else if we ask for raises from the boss without a word of praise, we're a little bit afraid he'll answer no. No! NO!

Therefore we write of movements for local home improvements, and try to remember what it was the mayor said. We write out a selection on better garbage collection, and then dear friends, we slink away to bed.

Mothers' Day Note

The trouble about writing concerning Mothers' Day is that this column is supposed to be humorous, in a mild way, of course. And Mother is one topic on which we are not disposed to be even mildly funny.

To our Mother we owe an enormous debt. Like most of our debts it remains unpaid. For one service which Mother did for us we are particularly grateful, and of this we simply must speak.

Mother never smiled when we tried to be funny. At times, when we tried to be the life of the dinner table, we were inclined to resent Mother's calm disdain of our cavorting. Mother, we said to ourselves, had no sense of humor.

Now we know differently. Mother was simply trying to protect us for our experience in the cold hard world. She was making us ready for the time when our brightest efforts would meet with the dreary, unblinking stare of a larger audience. Mother isn't the only one who thinks we're extremely unfunny. But, thanks to Mother, we don't mind much, now.

Note Of Defiance

In fact we still laugh like all-geek-out at our own jokes — no matter how often we hear ourselves say them.

Note Of Discovery

Under a plank in the garden we found, together with an assortment of worms and beetles, an old fragment of verse. After scraping away the mud and the slime, we read:

"Roses are red,
Violets are blue,
Pansies are easiest to grow,
Then we carefully put it back where we had found it.

What's The Use Note?

In one of our school years there was quite a fad for asking senseless questions. "How far is up?" "Why is a mouse when it spits?" "How wide is the weather?" and so on and on. But evidently there was one we forgot

BY GOLDEN GLOW

Coronation is uppermost in our minds still, even though when you read these few lines all will be over. Today as I write, Newmarket citizens are busy decorating, or planning decorations to be put in place on Tuesday, ready for coronation day.

I feel I could write reams about it all, but will restrain my pen. I know in my heart Newmarket is going to have a fitting and an appropriate celebration, for everyone, from the mayor down to the smallest child able to take part and march in the procession to Memorial Park, is co-operating to make it one of the most memorable days in the history of this old town, where wonderful celebrations have been held in the past.

Newmarket has always been considered the "Hub of North York," and we never yet have had a second place on any occasion where loyalty to our king and the throne was involved. It has been wonderful to take a ride through our streets and see already, days before the wonderful event, how citizens have responded to the urge to show their loyalty.

We had a wonderful surprise, driving home along Huron Street, one evening this week after dark, to see the magnificent display at the Davis' Leather Factory. I think they must surely have been the first to put up decorations and flood lights. They have set a high standard for us all to follow.

You see I cannot get away from the thought of coronation even if I know it will all be over when this article goes into print. But I do think we owe grateful thanks to the mayor and the town council, especially the committee in charge, for their untiring efforts to make the celebration a success, and have everything done in a manner befitting such a wonderful, world-wide event. Never in the history of mankind, save along the British Commonwealth of Nations, has there ever been such a coronation as this one of our beloved King George and his consort, Queen Elizabeth.

I think I will have to walk around the block, or something equally drastic, in order to fill my mind with other happenings, or I will fill this article yet with the coronation, in spite of myself. On second thoughts, no I won't! For why? It's pouring rain! I'll walk around my chair to change my luck, as we used to say!

Here I am again — I did a marathon around my chair and I looked out of the window at the same time, and I can scarcely believe my eyes, for the trees are all starting to leaf out and the grass is a vivid green all along the boulevard of the street opposite our home. A little over a week ago we were shivering with the cold high raw atmosphere, and were making sure the furnace did not run low. House-cleaning and gardening were at a standstill!

Then suddenly, the beginning of this week, we had three hot summer days — children played outdoors with summer dresses, socks and slippers, and the boys hunted up their swimming suits. Local asparagus appeared — spring flowers all sprang into bloom. The pussy-willow tree became a mass of yellow fuzz, the willow tree man came selling grated horse-radish! Yes, indeed, we jumped into summer — but here we are once more back where we started from, a cold clammy day, rain has been falling all yesterday afternoon and all night. Furnace fires once more going, and people are back in warmer dress. But Sunday was glorious.

After being at morning service, we went for a car-ride to see how Lake Simcoe looked. Summer had arrived at the Lake. People were flooding there!

Traffic was heavy! Nearly every summer cottage had occupants. At Island Grove we were invited for a motor-launch ride over to the island, and it was as warm, if not warmer, than the middle of summer sometimes.

Then on we went to try out the new paved road. It is truly marvelous! A prettier, and more scenic drive will be hard to find; and when the last stretch from Island Grove to Jackson's Point is completed, it will be one of the finest drives anywhere in the Dominion, not even excepting the marine drive, Vancouver, or the scenic drive around wonderful Stanley Park in the same city. All they have there, that we have not, is the mountains, and I always maintain that looking up Lake Simcoe is like looking out to sea, and we do not have to take "tides" into consideration. (I never could imagine what use tides are anyhow!)

And I must not end up without telling about that swamp I have written of before several times, in the course of its reclaiming and development, the swamp that is no more, about a mile this side of Jackson's Point. Anyone who did not know that part of the lake front intimately can never properly appreciate what has been accomplished.

That stretch was most uninteresting and unattractive. In fact, it was rather a hazard and motorists were always glad when it was behind them, going or coming. You may recall an article I once wrote, during the early operations, when long rubber hoses were used to pump the sand from the floor of the Lake into the bed of the swamp. That swamp was absolutely repulsive — you fancied all sorts of horrors lurked there, snakes especially! And if an alligator had thrust its ugly head out, or horrid monkeys had chattered at you, it would have been no great surprise.

But wait till you see it now! It is pure magic, a miracle of modern science perhaps I should say. And it already has a name, quite appropriate too, "Paradise Beach." All the underbrush has been cleared out, the road widened, and a new cedar hedge fences it off. Trees have been left here and there, and soon things will be growing there again, but not swamp growth!

Just fancy ten acres of swamp reclaimed at one of the most attractive spots on our lovely lake — with its marvellous beach. And the sluggish river that flowed into the lake at the west end is now crossed by a sturdy modern cement bridge, replacing that dangerous narrow wooden one which motorists all abhorred.

On one went through Jackson's Point and on past "The Briars," the home of the Sibbald family, along the road shut in on both sides by tall cedar hedges to Mossington Park, Sutton West, and you could scarcely get over the wide bridge there over the Black River, for the crowds of people fishing. There must have been hundreds. Cars parked everywhere. People eating picnics in the open, people dressed in summer clothing, and the mouth of the river filled with small craft of every description, with intent fishers aboard.

But what caught my eye especially was the dredge anchored there. It is removing the sandbar that always forms at the rivermouth and prevents even the smallest boats from navigating safely. The government has at last taken it in hand, and now summer cottage owners, along the banks of the river will be able to pass freely up and down and on into the lake. That, too, is a wonderful shore!

On we went, past the old historic Sibbald's church, and turning west and again south, we came to Virginia Beach where we turned and came back to the highway at Virginia and so on home.

The week before we had a short ride down towards the south and we kept the motor-rug over us and the heater turned on.

Last Sunday we travelled with windows all open and I even threw off the light coat I was wearing. Oh the weather! You never can count on it — I'll end up by saying I hope the weather helps us to celebrate coronation day by being like it was the beginning of this week.

Changed Society By Home Contacts Seen By Speaker

is of such a nature that will make the children discourteous, back-biting and meddlesome?

"Tattling should be discouraged in the home, then it will not spread to the schoolroom and community. Favoritism should not be tolerated. Use each member of the family with equity, especially the children, and this in turn will be reflected in the children's contact with their comrades.

"A boost is always better than a knock. All of us cannot be great, neither can all the children be leaders, so let us teach our children to be kind to all and especially those who are less fortunate. Courtesy and respect should be observed in the intimate relations of the home.

"Honesty and truthfulness should not only be taught, but practised, by young and older ones. It is said the 'hand that rocks the cradle, rules the world.' It therefore behoves each one of us to be a real homemaker, and what a tremendous responsibility that is!

"Both mothers and fathers should be equally interested in creating a Christian atmosphere in the home. Home should be a happy, enjoyable place—a wonderful place to cultivate the art of Christian living. The adjustment of parents and children is one of the crying needs of today. Mothers and fathers must be alive to the importance of world events in order to understand successfully the 20th century child.

"A lot of trouble is caused because the parents have lost the viewpoint of youth. It is so easy to forget the time when we were bubbling over, as it seemed, with ideas, ambitions, suppressed emotions and enthusiasm. All this is typical of youth, the springtime of life, and in order to lead successfully our boys and girls to a broader, truer knowledge of the Christian mode of living we must, ourselves, be well acquainted with the fundamentals of Christian living.

"We cannot expect our views and opinions always to be adopted unless we are striving to live up to our ideals. In our everyday contacts with the world at large we hear so much about co-operation in business, church and social life. What a grand opportunity we have to practise co-operation in the home, where true co-operation is already in daily use although we do not seem to realize it.

"Home is the place to teach the true meaning of success. Real success is not the accumulation of great wealth at the expense of another. Success is the realization of having done some good for mankind. The love for art, literature, appreciation of art, music, and all that is beautiful is formed to a great extent by home contacts.

"Lasting life comradeships recognize that neither party is flawless, and are generously tolerant as both journey along the pathway of life. Statistics tell us that divorces have increased 75 per cent in the last 10 years in America. It is not so much the divorce laws but marriage conditions that need to be reformed. Hasty marriages, greed for money and position, and neglect of parents' admonitions, help fill our divorce courts.

"After considering the importance of home contacts, let us not forget the one who is the central figure of all homes, 'mother.'

"At this season of the year, when homage is paid to the mothers of our land, let us have within us a desire to be a good homemaker, a good mother, a good follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, and fervently pray, 'God Bless our Home and Mother.'

Sutton Schools Celebrate By Festival, Tree Planting

Children Show Handicraft Skill In Hobby Display

As a prelude to their celebration of the coronation, Sutton school children, with the help of the Mount Pleasant school choir, staged a musical festival in the Sutton town hall on Tuesday.

The program was as follows: Spring Voices and Robin Red-breast, sung by the junior chorus; My Little Nut Tree, by Hugh Laviolette, York festival gold medalist; Frank Doyle, Fletcher Prosser, John Burrows; Bedtime, by Mary Thayer; York festival silver medalist; Madeline Rose, Josephine Battaglia, Frances McLoughlin, Shirley Todd, Marilyn McLoughlin.

Another selection, Little Lambs, by the junior chorus, was followed by Buttercups and Daisies, sung by Ruth Carmichael, Grace Shier, Ruth Bray, Mary Joan Laviolette, Josephine Prosser. Miss Olive Meyers gave a vocal solo and George Arbon, Joe Holborn, John Oliver, Donald Robertson and Bobbie Stokes joined in singing the Woodpecker Song.

A piano solo by Bern Tremayne preceded the singing by the Mount Pleasant school choir of two selections, Early One Morning and Come With Me.

Miss Lillian Holborn, who won a gold and a silver medal at the Niagara Falls festival recently, sang a solo. The senior girls' chorus sang, Welcome to Lovely Spring, which was followed by a duet by Beverly Robertson and Gladys Burnham, pupils of the Sutton high school. A piano solo was played by Geo. Holborn.

The senior chorus sang Spring Bells, followed by a quartet consisting of Maureen Shannon, Olga Sheppard, Bern Tremayne and Rena Big Canoe, who sang Hark the Tiny Cowslip Bell.

A recitation, The Frost, was given by Beth Tremayne, followed by another selection by the senior chorus, O Shepherd Boy.

A solo by Miss M. Draper, who won two gold medals at the York county festival, and a chorus, In Loyal Bands United, completed the program.

On Tuesday afternoon the school took part in a tree planting program. A hobby show, in which students displayed their handicraft, formed an interesting part of the celebration.

Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Paed of Woodville and Miss Velma Bosworth of Sutton were Sunday guests at the Hadden Farm.

Incorrect List Printed

Unfortunately in listing the "Round the World" contest answers in The Era last week they were badly jumbled. Some of the answers were correct and others were incorrect. Naturally, some of the contest followers were quick to note these errors and to communicate with The Era. The correct answers will be published in detail just as soon as space permits.

SUTTON TEAM'S STICKS ARRIVE

With the arrival of a supply of brand new sticks last week Sutton's icehouse team edged a little nearer completion. Plenty of material is on hand for the formation of a first-class squad, it is stated.

John Sibbald is president of the club, Bill Parks, vice-president, V. S. Shepherd, secretary, Remy Ruel, treasurer. The team will be managed by Donley Stiles and coached by Leon Smith.

Payment of The Era in advance, and discontinuance of subscriptions not renewed, is in the best interests of readers. The new system is proving popular, and assures a better local newspaper.

EARLY LAYERS Big Pullets — Big Eggs

You Get All Three When You Buy Bray's "Xtra-Profits" Chicks or Started Pullets... And They're Selling at Rock Bottom Prices for the Balance of the Season

SOME poultry raisers are going to cash in on the high egg prices that are forecasted for next fall. Others are going to miss the boat. It's going to depend on how early your pullets are ready for the nest—how well developed they are—and how quickly they come up in egg size from pullet eggs to A-large.

Bray, "Xtra-Profits" chicks are born with a "head start" and they never seem to lose it. They grow and develop with extraordinary speed, and come into production much earlier than slower-growing chicks. Read what these customers say:

W. J. K., Jordan Station, Ont.: "When they were 6 weeks old, I weighed 14 chicks, just as I caught them. The lightest weighed 1 lb. 6 oz., and the heaviest 1 lb. 8 oz. Out of 202 chicks started, I have lost only one."

J. A. G., Lachute, Que.: "Just a line to report on the 600 four-week-old pullets we received from you 3 weeks ago. They were so lively on arrival they hopped out of the boxes as soon as the lids were off, and up to date there has not been one death... In fact, Mrs. G. and myself have decided not to do our own brooding next year but to get our requirements from you. This will amount to 3,000 pullets and between 6,000 and 6,000 cockerels."

These "Xtra-Profits" pullets develop the size to stand heavy, continuous production. And they lay BIG eggs. They are all HATCHED FROM BIG EGGS—25 to 30 oz. per dozen. Send for today's price list. Our prices are down to rock bottom. And our list of daily specials often contains odd lots of started chicks that would suit your needs to perfection.

GIFT OF BIBLE

No Christian Criticizes Bible
British Israel Head
Declares

PROPHECY FULFILLED

"Shame on those who have taken by the grace of God out of the King's official title, for it is only by the grace of God that George VI is our king," protested Rev. E. J. Springett, dominion commissioner of the British Israel-World Federation, addressing a public meeting in the Presbyterian church last Thursday night.

"The almost incalculable wealth of the regalia used in the coronation service," he stated, "is overshadowed by the presentation of the Bible, in which the nation, through its constitutional leaders, acknowledges: 'We present this, the most valuable thing in the world to the King. Here is the royal law.'"

"People throughout the empire should demand of the authorities that the nation return to a mode of life founded on the guidance of the Bible, acknowledged basis of the British constitution," Mr. Springett affirmed.

"No matter what the bishops say," he continued, "the ceremony of the ring in the coronation service is a divine indication that marriage is indissoluble and cannot be broken except by death."

"The British are the only people in the world who say: 'God Save the King,'" he stated. "This is a further indication of the significance that Britain is destined to be the medium through which the throne is being held in trust for Him whose right it is."

"Improved world-wide rapid communications also lend significance to this coronation, since the people of every race and nation in the world would be listening to the greatest proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom of God that had ever been made."

"We are told in the Bible," he quoted, "that 'this gospel must be preached in all the world and then shall the end come.' This prophecy will be fulfilled for the first time when the coronation service is broadcast."

"Everything that is being done in this coronation is based on the Bible."

"Those who criticize British-Israel criticize this book, and that is no man's business. No matter who he is, he is not a Christian."

Mr. Springett stated that British-Israel "is not a new denomination. 'There are no new churches now,' he said. 'You have just been singing what you don't believe, the words 'one body we' in Onward Christian Soldiers. You are not one body. You are a lot of denominations.'"

CORONATION SERVICE
HELD AT ST. JOHN'S

A beautiful coronation service was held in St. John's Catholic church Sunday evening, when a large congregation was present.

The pastor, Rev. Dr. W. D. Muckle, offered the official prayers of the church for the King and queen. This was followed by a congregational hymn to the Holy Ghost to bring light to the minds and peace to the hearts and the homes of the king and his subjects. Afterwards Rev. Dr. Muckle welcomed the mayor, Dr. S. J. Boyd, and all who were present.

Then he introduced his brother, Rev. Joseph T. Muckle, professor at the University of Toronto, who delivered a very appropriate sermon on the occasion. Afterwards the gallery choir sang the hymn, "Regina Coeli."

Solemn benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament was then given by Rev. Dr. Muckle while all the congregation joined in the singing of the beautiful hymn in praise of Jesus in the Blessed Sacrament. At the close of the services all stood in attention and sang "God Save the King."

GAS STATION ROBBED

Frank Doyle was the loser to the tune of about $10 on Thursday night, when his service station on Main St. was broken into by thieves who pried open and looted his cash register.

MRS. I. HARRIS

Trinity Y. P. S. and Evangelical Auxiliary Meet Together Monday

"Our king, George VI, whose coronation takes place on Wednesday, May 12, has the courage and determination and steadfastness of his father, possessing a real love of home, coupled with a keen and sincere affection for the common people of his realm, rounding out a noble character worthy to become monarch of the British Empire," said Mrs. I. Harris at a combined meeting of the Evangelical Auxiliary and the Y. P. S. of Trinity United church on Monday evening.

The coronation service from its beginning, including the brilliant pageantry of the procession to Westminster Abbey, was splendidly described in detail. Mrs. Harris augmented her talk with the aid of pictures of the royal family, scenes to be witnessed, and articles to be used in connection with the coronation, stressing the religious aspect of the service which dates back to the time of Britain's early kings.

Referring to the beautiful and much-loved Queen Elizabeth, Mrs. Harris spoke of her early life, some of her personal likes and traits, the naturalness of her smile which, coming from within and being most sincere, has won for her the respect and admiration of her subjects.

Although not of royal birth, the queen possesses a sterling character and charm of personality, and her marriage to the then Duke of York, was a love-match, proving to the world that team work is not only possible but highly successful in this business of "being royal."

After the singing of the National Anthem, Miss Nora Macintosh, president of the Y. P. S. and Mrs. S. King, acting president of the auxiliary, expressed the appreciation of the two societies to Mrs. Harris for her fine address.

Miss Mary Rutledge, Mrs. Allan Mills, Mrs. Aubrey Seythes and Miss L. Pipher gave two very fine double piano duets, which were enjoyed.

The auxiliary then withdrew. Mrs. J. H. Wells, assisted by several members of her group, portrayed "The Joy of the Lord," giving the conversation between would-be missionaries and missionaries, setting forth the motives and ideals, the difficulties and joys of the life of a missionary.

Following the reports of the secretaries and treasurers, Mrs. King expressed a wish for the president's, Mrs. Hickson's early recovery from her recent illness. The auxiliary plan to supply flowers for the pulpit during the month of July.

SPECIAL STAMPS ON SALE

The coronation stamp issue went on sale at the post office on Monday. The stamps were in 3, 4, 5 and 8-cent denominations and the 3-cent stamp was a double one.

Many Newmarketers, anxious to obtain a souvenir of the coronation, addressed envelopes bearing the new stamps to themselves, to be cancelled with the coronation date.

While no instructions concerning a further supply has been received, there are plenty of stamps still on hand for collectors and souvenir-hunters. The Era learned today.

Ontario Surplus Is $9,000,000

Toronto, May 11.—The balance sheet of a business in which every person in Ontario is interested, noteworthy for a substantial surplus and an equally substantial debt reduction, is brought to the attention of the province with the publication of the government's financial statement for the fiscal year just closed (see page seven).

Subject to widespread favorable comment when Hon. Mitchell F. Hepburn, prime minister and provincial treasurer, presented Ontario's showing of an estimated surplus of $7,000,000 after paying a relief bill of $12,500,000, was considered remarkable inasmuch as it represented the first balanced budget in Canada since the depression. The complete picture, as revealed in the figures of the published statement shows the actual surplus indicated to be $9,313,936; and this after taking care of a relief bill, not of $12,500,000 only, but of $13,270,000.

Attention is directed to the fact that the treasury bill debt has been lowered by $12,000,000 and that the average rate of interest is half that standing on the books in July, 1934.

Another fact which is stressed is that 15-year money was obtained at home at the most favorable rate received by any province in a quarter of a century. Bonds with an average maturity of 16½ years, it is pointed out, were sold at a cost of about 3½ per cent, the two issues reflecting the high credit enjoyed by the province.

Many of the budget announcements have been enthusiastically acclaimed throughout the province by reason of the widespread benefits they represent. The highest commendation has been forthcoming from municipal councils as a result of the grant-in-aid of provincial subsidy to municipalities equal to one mill on the tax rate. At the same time these councils have been enabled to reduce taxation as a result of the province having relieved them from contributing to the cost of old age pensions and mothers' allowances. The government's sympathetic attitude, so far as social legislation is concerned, is also reflected in the premier's statement endorsing the Dominion government's decision to grant pensions to the blind at the age of 40.

It is pointed out also that, in addition to abolishing the amusement tax, representing a sacrifice in revenue of $1,000,000 a year, there have been other drastic cuts in taxation which have been greeted with enthusiasm on every hand. In the case of licensed farmers' trucks and commercial vehicles, there was a reduction in cost of 25 per cent, which means a saving of over $1,000,000 a year to some 80,000 of these commercial operators, and a corresponding loss in revenue to the government.

At the same time, there has been considerable rejoicing over the additional relief to rural municipalities in the reduction from 5 to 3 per cent, the interest rate charged under the Municipal Drainage Act and the Tile Drainage Act, and the lowering of service charges for hydro to farmers.

ABDICATION

"But 100 years hence," Mr. Davis prophesied, "telling one or two other coronation happenings, 'the incident in connection with the coronation of 1937 will be the one of greatest interest, the occasion being the renunciation of the crown by a young man, turning his back on his people and country to follow his own desires.'"

"It was a disappointment to those who served overseas with the Canadian forces and knew him then. Unfortunately, in the intervening years, he missed what is required for true greatness, unselfish service to humanity."

"It was brought home to me last October, I was travelling from Norwich to Leicester. We decided to stop at a country inn for a few sandwiches. While the housewife was busying herself in the kitchen, the innkeeper entertained us. I learned then for the first time that we were on the boundary of the Sandringham estate. The story the innkeeper told of the gloom lying over the estate was almost unbelievable. The Sandringham estate was to be broken up. Those whose families had lived there for generations were to look for work elsewhere."

"Stopping at that same inn last February, I learned that immediately the present king took charge, the Sandringham estate was to be moved to the condition of his father's time in every detail."

"We today are pledging ourselves to a young man who is, I think, the personification of an English gentleman, a man who puts duty first."

Mr. Davis praised the king's Scottish wife and the home life of the royal family. "There are none of us but would be delighted to spend an hour or two with them," he said.

"We are pledging ourselves to this king who so properly deserves our support," Mr. Davis said.

Canadians were doubly fortunate to have the advantages of British institutions and to be away from the old land's danger of foreign attacks. Mr. Davis said, telling of bomb shelters he had seen being constructed in Britain, of gas-masks being stored by the millions, "for a situation which everybody believes may be staved off for a year or two, but may through unexpected happenings break overnight."

"We are fortunate to be able to go to our beds and know that our homes will not be bombed overnight," Mr. Davis said.

For the rest of the coronation year Mr. Davis asked that his hearers "think good thoughts," and referred to the 131st psalm: "His truth shall be our shield and buckler."

"It is just as easy to tune into that source of strength as to tune into CFRB," Mr. Davis said. "Before the end of the year, too, spend a moment or two in front of this memorial, and think of the young men who laid down their lives. May we ever keep them green in memory."

In opening the service Mayor Dr. S. J. Boyd, the chairman, expressed appreciation of the way in which citizens had decorated their homes and places of business.

The service was greatly enhanced by the choir of school boys and girls, who had been trained by Mrs. M. B. Seldon. The service included a hymn written by Rev. Arthur J. Whitaker. The service was participated in by Mr. Patstone, Rev. J. H. Wells, Rev. Dr. W. S. Alexander, Rev. Dr. D. McIntyre and Adjutant A. D. MacFavish.

Rev. Dr. W. D. Muckle attended with the separate school children. Before the service the Newmarket Veterans laid a wreath on the memorial and Mrs. S. J. Boyd laid a wreath on behalf of the town.

The parade from the north end of the town, along flag-decorated Main St., was memorable. The Veterans, both Aurora and Newmarket, from the Citizens' Band, the R. S. A. Bugle Band, and the school children, many of them dressed in coronation colors, and all wearing their coronation participated in the parade.

At the same time, there has been considerable rejoicing over the additional relief to rural municipalities in the reduction from 5 to 3 per cent, the interest rate charged under the Municipal Drainage Act and the Tile Drainage Act, and the lowering of service charges for hydro to farmers.

Among the attractive floats was the town fire truck in patriotic colors and a combined Office Specialty, Davis Leather and Dixon Fence float.

Many citizens heard the actual coronation service broadcast from Westminster Abbey.

REDS WOULD DESTROY

Continued from page one "The king and queen being crowned are young people," Dr. Boyd said. "They will be your king and queen for many years to come."

"You are an audience of young people trained in mind and body. You are the bulwark of the British nations. We expect you to leave the world better than you find it. On the other hand, there are uneducated and some new Canadians who take a different slant. There are Reds, whose gospel it is to tear apart, knock down, and to destroy authority and public institutions. We count on educated Canadians to counteract them."

FLAG-WAVING

Continued from page one There is a real danger that all of us may lose the real significance of the occasion in an orgy of sentiment under the guise of patriotism. What is the real meaning of the coronation ceremony to us?

"In the first place the service is one of traditional form. It recalls the whole history of our race. No matter how progressive or forward-looking one may be, it should be recognized that there can be no healthy growth that does not value the contribution of past ages. The coronation ceremony recalls our history to us."

"The historic forms of the service, however," Mr. McCulley said, "are no mere relic of a dead past, they have been adapted, as so many other British institutions have been adapted, to meet the new conditions of a new day. For instance: this is the first occasion when a king has actually been crowned as the king of Canada and the other self-governing dominions as well as of Great Britain."

"In no other European country could there take place a ceremony such as that which will occur in London tomorrow. In most of them it would be an opportunity for a display purely military in character. In this ceremony representatives of all people gather and representatives of the various guilds of modern professions and of all walks of life will participate. The school boys of Westminster School are the ones who are privileged to lead the people in the acclamation of the new sovereign in the age-hallowed words, 'God Save the King.'"

"In the course of the ceremony the King pledges himself to the service of his people. This recalls to our minds the fact that all leadership must give itself in service. He that would be greatest among you must be the servant of all."

"There is at the present time a tendency to disparage not only

AURORA MAYOR CONGRATULATED

Mayor Dr. C. R. Boulding was congratulated by the council on the splendid showing made by the wire-haired fox terrier, Champion Benholm Ballet Girl, adjudged best dog in the Toronto Ladies' Kennel Club show.

A delegation from the board of trade visited the meeting of the Aurora council on Monday of last week to inquire about the situation concerning the Peterboro-Orangeville highway.

The Salvation Army were granted permission to hold a tag day on May 22.

R. Smith and S. Cook asked for more consideration in the matter of fuel for those on relief. It was agreed, however, that no action would be taken other than that previously decided upon by the committee.

The acting fire chief, medical officer, and Mr. Dunham, inspector, were asked to make the regular spring-time inspection of properties for fire hazard and sanitary condition.

A letter was read from the library board, embodying a complaint regarding the caretaking of the library, and asking that the floor be washed and the woodwork cleaned. It was decided that, owing to the complaints which have been received by the council in respect to the caretaking of the public buildings, that tenders for this work would be called for.

A motion was carried to procure new uniforms for the police department at the lowest cost possible.

loyalty to country, but any loyalty that involves a discipline of the individual. Man, however, cannot exist without being a part of a larger group of some kind. We are members of a great Empire which is best described by that phrase, 'The British Commonwealth of Nations.' It is a privilege as well as a responsibility for each of us, as well as for our King.

"Let us, therefore, at this time," the headmaster suggested, "consecrate ourselves anew to the finest ideals for which our nation stands, and prepare ourselves to take our part in the advancement of civilization in partnership with all those people of diverse races and languages, who at this time acknowledge the kingship of him who is our rightful sovereign lord."

Members of the junior choir were: Joyce Bothwell, Robert Brooks, Lois Cane, Doris Eves, Ronald Eves, Herbert Elines, Irene Farren, Hattie Farren, Audrey Geer, Lois Geer, Lloyd Doris Johns, Jean Howlett, Barbara Johns, Oona Lyons, Dorothy Lundy, Shirley Lundy, Helen Miller, Bruce Munshaw, Marion Munshaw, Phyllis Ough, Eileen Price, Marjory Rogers, Beryl Rowntree, Irene Rowntree, Jim Russell, Molly Thompson, Mary Margaret Webb, Mavis Wainman, Ronald Webster, Jack Williams, Davis Edwards, John Edwards.

In the evening the senior choir sang two anthems, "The Nation's Prayer" and "Jerusalem."

Mother was trying to patch up the quarrel between her little son and daughter.

"Now, Tommy," said she, "I read the other day of a little boy in England who walked ten miles through the snow to fetch a doctor to his little sister. Now, would you do that?"

"No," replied Tommy, "but I'd do it to fetch a dentist."

FLOWERS AT HER FEET

CHAPTER 38

"Drink this," Mae held a glass with something aromatic in it to Alix's mouth.

Alix drank it obediently and pushed back her hair. "Nerves," she said, referring to that mad laughter that had ended in weak tears.

"Nerves is right. You're not going out tonight if I have to get Lizzie Ellis to get out the old musket her father used in the civil war to keep people away. There'll be no wedding if this keeps up."

She thought of the dire possibility of Alix's having a nervous breakdown, and being forced to spend her wedding day in a hospital after she had brought out the special lavender sheets for the big bed in which Alix was to sleep the night before her wedding.

She thought of the great baskets of gold and yellow flowers that were to decorate the halls of the Alexander home that had not yet housed a bride in her day. She thought of the shaken propriety of the Rev. Mr. Smythe if she were to explain that the bride had had a nervous breakdown a week before the wedding and that "Miss Alexander regrets."

She thought of the gossamer gown of larkspur blue organza that would hang on a padded, perfumed hanger waiting for Alix to wear it, carrying a great armful of yellow flowers.

She sat back on her heels. "Oh, my, it would be dreadful! I've ordered 20 chickens for the salad, Alix."

"Have you?" Alix sniffed, having not the least idea what Mae was thinking of. "I hope it isn't going to be another case of 'Again, She Ordered Chicken Salad'."

"She's going to get it whether she likes it or not. And excellent punch and sandwiches and sliced ham and hot breads and the biggest wedding cake Bairdsdale has ever seen."

"Oh, you're still talking about the wedding? Could we talk about something else for a little bitty change, please, Mae? To tell you the truth, I'm a little tired of it. So's poor Bill. He's getting thinner, it seems to me."

"And why not? You're on the go every minute. Well, it's only once in a lifetime. Come along and I'll run you home in my car. It'll feel better when I've had a little rest," Alix said to Mae as they approached the road to Miss Lizzie's.

"Hello, you've got company," there was a green sedan parked before the white fence. "Speaking of angels, unless I miss my guess that's Dr. Hill's car and that is Dorcas now paying you a belated call."

"I hope there's no one ill, but I do hope it isn't Dorcas calling on me tonight. I'm feeling pretty much all in."

"Want me to come in with you, Alix?"

"No, thanks, Mae. I'll see you later. Thanks for the ride."

"Hello Dorcas," Alix summoned a smile from the depth of her weariness when she saw the other girl in the dim parlor. "Did you come to see me?"

"Hello, Alix. The answer is 'Yes and no,' she said easily. "I had to drive over to see Hattie, and I thought it would be a good time to have a little talk with you. I don't imagine you have very much time usually."

"Come along up to my room. I suppose it's Hattie's rheumatism?" Alix said over her shoulder. "I'm trying to finish up at the shop you know."

"Yes, I knew you were awfully busy. That's why I didn't stop around at the shop to see you," Alix cleared a box and some papers from the bed. "Sit here, Dorcas, and please excuse the appearance of this place. You know how it is."

Dorcas sat on the side of the bed and clasped her hands in her lap. She looked at Alix searchingly—more searchingly than she meant to. Then she said in a low voice, "Alix, are you very happy?"

"Of course," said Alix, as she would have to any stranger.

"Are you and Bill as happy as most young people getting married are?"

"Isn't that a strange question for you to ask me, Dorcas?" said Alix with resentment.

"I beg your pardon if I said it so that it sounded impertinent. I merely meant it is all . . . all just wonderful to you?"

Alix was contrite, "I'm so tired, Dorcas, I'm really past all thinking. It wasn't really an answer. You look tired. I met Bill today on Main street."

"On, did you?" Alix felt that Dorcas was waiting for her to say something.

"Yes," thought he looked rather haggard."

"We've been keeping late hours."

"Of course. And when you're married everything will be different." Dorcas played with a piece of string on the box beside her.

"That's what Bill tells me."

"When you're married to Bill, Alix, you be a good wife. I'm very fond of Bill and I want him to have the best."

"Very fond of him?" Alix asked, measuring those four words. She didn't say it to pry or to be impolite, however.

Dorcas got up and gave Alix a very wide, candid smile.

"Very," she said. "Just like everyone else in Bairdsdale, I've got to run along now. We'll meet again before the wedding, but I'll say it here. Best of luck to you both."

Alix smiled and shook the hand that Dorcas offered, but when Dorcas had gone, she stood with the palms of her hands pressed against the door and tried to recapture something that eluded her.

Columbus day fell on the Wednesday before the wedding.

Columbus day, the anniversary of the first time that she had been invited by John Sayre to be his guest!

Columbus day, two years later, and it was only three days before her marriage to Bill Boyd!

There was a printed crepe gown in the big lavender-scented closet waiting to be worn at the party. The little melon-colored knitted suit was long since dust. The melon-colored suit she had worn two years before. The suit that had set off in contrast the twin dark flowers of her eyes with incandescent lights that burned brightly with an inward happiness.

Buckling the straps of her violet satin sandals on that holiday night, she wondered what had become of the sturdy golf shoes she had worn that day, and was appalled that she could not remember. They seemed suddenly important to her, part of that other life. She mourned her little shoes, because she had no right to mourn for other things that were gone.

"It's a terrible night," Miss Lizzie said, looking out the window over which sheets of rain poured steadily. It had been raining and threatening to clear all day, only to darken and have the heavens open again and drench the world.

"Don't you usually have storms like that at this time of year?" Alix asked by way of conversation.

"Yes, we do, but we don't usually have these hurricane rains."

Bill picked Alix up in his arms and carried her to the porch to his car. "Some rain! We were listening to the weather reports over the radio tonight and there's been real hurricanes along with this storm."

"Pshaw, we're not sissies!" Alix said. "It doesn't mean anything to us. We'll forget it when we get to the party."

Of all the parties that had been given for Bill and Alix, Gretchen Newbold's dinner party was the high point. Dinner at eight, she had insisted upon, and indicated that dinner jackets and "best" evening frocks were expected.

"Darling!" Gretchen kissed Alix on her cheek, making sure that she did not disarrange her own lipstick or muss her white taffeta picture gown. "This dreadful rain is making a failure of my party. Lillian and Merrill just telephoned and said their car was left out this afternoon and he can't get it started. Tommy Fleunt called and said there won't be a taxi available in town for the next hour. So we'll have to get along on hors d'oeuvres until they arrive. And I do so want to have it at eight!"

A squawking and screeching greeted Bill and Alix when they entered Gretchen's drawing-room. It was George Newbold at his radio.

"Hi, folks! We seem to be alone. I was afraid my company might be dull and I've been fooling around the radio. Can't get thing. I want to try to hook this thing up."

"Pretty bad storm, eh, George?"

"I'll say. I've been getting press radio stuff here about trains stopped, planes down, bridges under . . ."

"George, let's have a good time tonight and not have anything like that," Alix put a prophetic hand toward the dial that switched off the radio.

CHAPTER 39

Alix, sitting at her host's right, at Gretchen Newbold's dinner party, smiling graciously, as a guest of honor should, thought: "I should take careful note of all the details of such things as this. In a little while I will be a hostess. I'll have to think of silver and linen and flowers. I'll refer to Bill as 'my husband' and all the strange new things that are coming into my life as 'my this' and 'my that'."

She tried to tabulate what she saw in her mind. Red roses in white glass. White candles in silver candlesticks. Twelve-inch salad plates. Three — no — four forks. The maid waits by the pantry door, the butler at the sideboard. You had to know these things when you were married.

Her dreamy wondering was met Bill's across the table. As though he divined the pattern of her thoughts, he smiled at her reassuringly and Alix felt a familiar warmth.

It was nice to feel that there would always be someone like Bill around.

It would have been ecstatic to have another man with you all your life. But few people know or want ecstasy and the nice things were not to be scorned.

There were hot, fluffy cheese biscuits served with the green salad on the 12-inch plates.

"Good hand!" Alix thought. "I'll have to learn all these things. She thought of the simple homey, she had cooked and served, the little party dishes and cold supper back in that upstate moment on the East river. She thought of all the unusual dishes that were being served at this dinner. And of all the other things she didn't know.

"Penny for your thoughts, or can't you tell them?" George Newbold whispered into her left ear, bringing her out of her reverie.

Alix laughed and said, "I guess I can, but perhaps I ought not to. I might shock Bill." She said his name, but suddenly she looked down the table to where Dorcas Hill in white crepe frock looked back at her with an in-mutable frown.

"I'll cut you and anything she has to say," Bill said justly.

"It's not very interesting," Alix wondered why she went on at such length. She was bored with the whole idea herself, but she felt impelled to say what she had to say the while she looked at Dorcas Hill.

"I was just thinking that I haven't the least idea how many sheets and pillow cases, towels and tablecloths a bride should have. I was just thinking that I wouldn't have the remotest idea what to tell a cook about preparing food. I was also thinking that I'll probably never be able to check up the laundry, and will undoubtedly never have a bit of butter in the house. Bill, would you like to get out of this engagement?"

They all laughed because Alix looked so completely sincere.

"If he would, Alix, you can have me," Will Boyd, Senior, puffed.

"I'd marry you just to have you around to look at," Tom Thatcher said. And his wife said, "Really?"

Tom didn't say anything else.

"Well, let's all look at each other in the drawing-room," Gretchen rose and her guests followed. It was stuffy in the dining-room. The candlelight flickered in the draft from the crack of an opened window. The rain beat against the windows in torrents.

Alix and Gretchen sat on a lounge back of the coffee table and, while Gretchen served them, the girls crowded around Alix.

"Is the honeymoon destination going to be a secret?" someone asked Alix.

"Ye-es," she said hesitatingly, and realized that she hadn't the least idea what they were going to do about a honeymoon.

"You can at least tell us what you are going to wear going away," another girl said.

Alix was going to dismiss it by saying, "Oh, just a blue suit," but she saw Dorcas looking at her again. She couldn't get away from the reproach in Dorcas' eyes. She realized that she wasn't acting like a bride-to-be. Knew that things were expected of her for Bill's sake.

"I'd love to tell you about it," she said with animation. "I'm wearing a dressmaker suit of navy eponge. Made with soft lines and lined with a small pattern of printed taffeta. My blouse is made of the same material. The hat is small, navy felt, with some kind of a feather on it. It's all very simple." There! That was the best she could do.

It wasn't a very good best she soon realized. They were waiting, expecting more of her.

"I've some other things I think you'll like. There's a velvet dress, and a gown with a cluster of embroidered flowers where you would wear a corsage at the belt. And let me see . . . oh yes, I've a yellow house coat." She gritted her teeth mentally and wondered why you had to share such silly things with everyone else.

"You girls have nothing to do but talk about clothes all day," complained George. "Let's get this party going."

Alix was thinking with longing of her soft bed, when the party had arrived at the "let's dance" stage.

Lugs were rolled back, chairs shoved against the wall and George knelt before the radio to tinker with it. Through the raucous static, a dance band came on.

Bill claimed the first dance with Alix. She went into his embrace gratefully. She was tired and she wouldn't have to talk to Bill.

He twirled her twice around the floor and led her out to an empty room.

"Like the party?"

"Of course, I do, Bill. I think it's terribly sweet for all your friends to do things like this for you."

"It isn't for me, Allie, it's for us. We're going to make it all up to our friends. We'll give some grand parties when we get back. A funny thing about that question about our honeymoon. We'd forgotten that entirely."

"Bill, you know I've always had a funny idea about honeymoons. I think they're rather difficult. Two strangers going off to start life under the most difficult conditions. I think if we were to start in our own home, get used to each other, and then go off in a month or two, it would be much better, don't you?"

That was the first time she had ever seen surprise on Bill's countenance. A sort of shocked surprise.

"But, Allie! Er . . . I thought the honeymoon was something every girl sort of . . . well . . ."

Instantly she said, "I thought it would be easier for you, Bill. I'm so forgetful, you might find me an annoyance instead of a help. I'd probably discover I'd forgotten my cold cream or the tickets or something. I told you I was going to be a difficult wife. Where would you like to go?"

"Maybe you are right," he said with averted eyes. "We'll talk it over tomorrow night. By the way, I've got to run up to Sioux City tomorrow, but I'll be back by dinner time."

"I'm careful of Chrysanthemums!"

"One day last Fall I was fixing a wire over a lady's flower garden. As I was leaving she said 'Thanks for being so careful of my chrysanthemums.'"

"Don't mention it, ma'am," I said; 'that's part of my job to be careful. Besides, I got a garden at home myself, so I know how you feel about it.'"

"I've been doing telephone work in this part of town for fifteen years. Most everybody knows I'm the telephone man. I hope they know they can trust me to be careful of their property."

CERTIFIED TRUE AND CORRECT

C. P. Mann
Provincial Auditor

In pursuance of a promise made during the Third Session of the Nineteenth Legislature of the Province of Ontario, I take this opportunity of publishing, for the information of the citizens of Ontario, the above financial report, together with this announcement as to the plans of the Government for passing on to the people certain benefits made available by reason of the surplus of $9,313,938.54, realized last year;—

MUNICIPAL DRAINAGE AID AND TILE DRAINAGE DEBENTURES

A reduction in interest on Municipal Drainage Debentures and Tile Drainage Debentures effective April 1, 1937, from 5 per centum to 4 per centum.

PASSENGER MOTOR CAR LICENSE FEES

A substantial reduction in passenger motor car license fees will be announced before October 15 next.

LICENSE FEES ON COMMERCIAL VEHICLES

Effective on November 1, 1937, when the 1938 permits will be available, there will be a reduction of 25 per cent. in the fees to be charged for the registration of all farm trucks and all other commercial motor vehicles and commercial trailers.

The approximate annual saving will be $1,000,000.00 to the operators of commercial vehicles.

PROVINCIAL SUBSIDY

The Provincial Government will pay, by way of a grant, to every city, town, village and township of the Province a sum representing the equivalent of one mill on the dollar of their respective assessments for general municipal purposes. This grant is made unconditionally but in the expectation and with the intent that the amount shall be passed on to the taxpayers of every community by a reduction of one mill in the general municipal tax rate. This subsidy will amount, in the aggregate, to the sum of approximately $3,000,000.

ROAD SUBSIDIES TO TOWNSHIPS

The 313 Townships which have in the past received subsidies of less than 50 per cent. will enjoy an increase to 50 per cent.

The annual benefit to the 313 Townships will be approximately — $300,000.00.

OLD AGE PENSIONS AND MOTHERS' ALLOWANCES

To further take the burden off real estate, the Provincial Government will assume the municipalities' share of Old Age Pensions and Mothers' Allowances.

This will enable the municipal councils to reduce their taxation by approximately $3,500,000.00 per annum.

PENSIONS FOR THE BLIND

The Province will assume the municipalities' share of the cost of this social legislation. It is estimated that the municipalities will therefore save approximately $100,000.00 per annum.

AMUSEMENTS TAX

Effective June 1, 1937, the Amusements Tax will be totally abolished. As over 80 per cent. of the amusements tax is collected from admissions of 25 cents or under, the benefit, largely to citizens of lesser means, will amount to $1,500,000.00 for the year 1937.

W. J. Stephenson
Prime Minister and Provincial Treasurer.
